Over to my Associate, Tony...

"There are no new ideas under the sun"

True or false?

I have no idea, but I DO know that creating impossible to ignore angles to position and sell your products from is a LOT easier than trying to come up with a new idea.

You don't need a new-under-the-sun product to make money, just an impossible to ignore angle ;)

Here's how to do it...

Never Sell Or Create Anything Unless It Has An Angle

Because it makes it a LOT harder and sometimes impossible to sell...

So what is an angle?

It's a way of framing your content and offers that will grab your potential customers' attention, and offer to help them in a unique way!

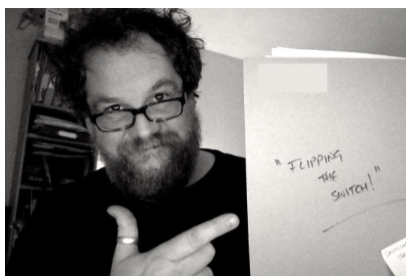

Sounds terrifying when you put it like that eh?

WHO could possibly create products and angles like that, especially when there's no new ideas under the sun?

Actually it's a lot easier than you might think.

Here's an example:

This is one of the angles I sell my Flipping The Switch course from:

"Here's an example in just one part of my business - affiliate marketing: My Flipping The Switch Strategy put me ahead of 95% of affiliate marketers, saw me featuring on leaderboards and winning prizes pretty much every time I promoted, and while I could comfortably live off my affiliate commissions alone I don't even consider affiliate marketing to be a major part of my business! That's how powerful approach is, and I honestly believe anyone can do this with a bit of guidance and effort!"

This Is A Complete, Holistic System For Building A Simple, Ethical Online Income Business Based Around Your Strengths And What You Like Doing.

Tony Shepherd

A 'simple, ethical online income business based around your strengths and what you like doing'

Compare that to the usual angles most products are pitched from where you have to FOLLOW a system or TAKE a course.

So with my angle creating something that can be built around the things you enjoy doing and are good at (often the same thing) and avoiding those painful tasks you're really not comfortable with...is a powerful selling angle

...and my sales conversions confirmed it too :)

Here’s another example:

Years back I had a mate who was an ex-fruit machine engineer. You know the type of slots you see in pubs, clubs etc?

Well he told me that a certain machine had an industry-known ‘tell’ that showed when it was going to pay out big time.

I was skeptical but we travelled up and down the county to pubs and clubs that had that type of machine and he showed me how most of the time he could get a decent payout for a small investment.

He knew what I did for a living so he asked how he could make money from this information.

I suggested he write his info up into an ebook or report and I could help him sell it.

He suggested titles such as ‘How to make money from fruit machines’ or ‘Fruit machine money’ and they were a bit weak to be honest AND there were a shedload of other info products with similar angles doing the rounds at the time.

So I came up with this headline:

“How To Make Money By Going To The Pub!”

And we sold tons of copies (after all it IS the dream lifestyle, right? :)

We were even approached by a big publishing house who specialised in this kind of info product with a view to licensing it but the truth is the info was a bit thin so nothing came of it.

But like I said, we sold tons of copies, outselling the many of our rivals purely because of the angle. The info was no better.

It was the angle that sold it.

Pure and simple.

Why Create Angles?

(I'm loving angles instead... :)

Because you'll make more money.

If you don't create unique angles it'll be harder to get noticed, harder to compete, harder to get your share of the market income which is one of the main reasons why many talented people give up before they have a chance to see any success.

So make the following change now in your business:

Create ONLY products and sales letters with angles

On one of my main 'meet Tony' pages* where I give away free reports and let new readers know a bit about me for relationship building purposes I offer a small report about how I've been making a consistent income from writing in the IM niche for the last ten years.

*The page is HERE if you fancy a look

But initially calling the report 'How I've made a living from writing in the IM niche' was a bit boring and, well it needed an ANGLE.

So here's what I changed it to and downloads increased over 30%:

The powerful word on there is 'scribbler'

"Ten Years As A Five Figure A Month Writer And Habitual Idea Scribbler In The Internet Marketing Niche"

Scribbling is something anyone can do. It's associated with child-like ease and non-conformity. It was THE perfect word to suggest that anyone can do the same :)

At the very least it's certainly powerful enough to get them to download the report, which is a relationship-builder and contains links to my Flagship course.

Put simply:

The angle is the reason why you opt-in to some lists and not others.

The angle is the reason you buy some stuff and not others.

How To Find (Or Create) The Angle In Your Own Products

Secret 1: If you're telling the same story as everyone else, make YOURSELF the angle.

So if you're selling how you made $500 as an affiliate last month then that's cool. It's interesting and many people who want to do the same would potentially like to opt-in or get out their credit cards to access your information.

But you will still find the competition fierce because if you look at the latest product releases in the internet marketing niche you'll find a LOT of the same information is available.

It doesn't mean yours isn't good or valuable, it just means you'll struggle to stand out unless you include an angle.

That's why you see successful marketers using angles like:

'How an Ex-Teacher Made $10,000 And Quit His Job In Just Three Months'

He's selling the same information but the angle is WHO the person telling the story is or WAS.

You might think this has been over-used or is a bit cliched and you'd be right to an extent.

Firstly it still works and works well.

But I'd suggest you go a little out of the ordinary and look at your life and some of the weirder things you've done.

Find what you're selling

Let's presume you have no sales history and you're trying to enter the market selling a resource sheet sharing where you can download free software that does the same (or almost the same) job as expensive paid versions.

You could just offer it like that - as it is.

But what you'd have is a resource sheet that (let's face it) is NOT unique, because as we kind of agreed earlier, there aren't many new ideas under the sun.

But go into your life and your weird past.

Look at the stupid or exciting or unusual things you've done and use THOSE.

Jason Fladlien made a lot of money selling his products from the point of view of an 'ex-monk' remember?

Just look at companies such as Agora Publishing and Streetwise Marketing in the UK for some absolutely STELLAR angles:

'Broom-Pushing-No-Hoper' To £297,000 Cash In The Bank In Just 180 Days!

How great is that eh? :)

and another...

Disgruntled Ex-Employee Blows The Whistle On The Banks' Big Secret, And Opens The "Money Floodgates"

I'm sure everyone reading this (including me) has been a disgruntled employee at some point in their lives?

Here are some other things I've been (see if you can relate)

Dumped ex-boyfriend

Bewildered new dad

Ex-Warehouse worker

Broke Labourer

Angry Amazon Customer

Worried Husband

Struggling Internet Marketer

Unlucky Race Punter

Now you put ANY of the above in front of the following headline:

“[Bewildered New dad] Shares His System For Making An Extra £800 Per Month From Ebay!”

“[Broke Labourer] Shares His System For Making An Extra £800 Per Month From Ebay!”

“[Worried Husband] Shares His System For Making An Extra £800 Per Month From Ebay!”

It’s the angle that makes it interesting.

YOU have been all of the people above. Not the exact ones of course, but similar - pregnant part-time worker, newly-retired postman, furious bank customer, ex-miner...

These are all real parts of your life and your experience and they’ll make your angle and your products and services hundred times more visible than most of your competition who AREN’T using them.

I’ve been doing this for years and it just plain old WORKS:

Find out how a free-lifestyle obsessed Hippy earns six figures a year, working three days a week by not giving a STUFF about money....

Lifestyle-obsessed hippy :) That's me!

Very true and something for my readers to hang their hats on.

You can change the angle for every product you launch.

Or you can (like me) wrap it up into a brand.

There are a hundred solutions out there - nothing new under the sun, remember? -
But a lifestyle-obsessed hippy telling you the solution MAKES it unique!

Secret 2: Use whatever leverage you have.

If you have any sort of proof use it.

If you made £234 from affiliate marketing last month, use it.

Show the screenshots.

If (like someone I know) you bumped into Tom Jones in a Las Vegas casino at 6am and drunkenly got a selfie with him then use it. Show the pic or even...

("Drunken Tom Jones Fan Shares His £200 A Week Affiliate Income Method!")

'Two Days After This Picture Of Me With Tom Jones Was taken, I had Banked ANOTHER £200 From my Secret Affiliate Method!'

Leverage.

Use it

Have fun - don't take it too seriously!

If you've been somewhere, met someone, had a run-in with a celebrity, an organisation, made a fool of yourself or ended up in hospital for some reason then USE IT

It’s your angle and it has a lot of human interest.

And since you’re marketing to humans, that’s a good thing :)

Secret 3: Look at your offer

Is your offer so unique or weird or of such value that you can actually use the OFFER as your angle then do so.

This is hard to do because most offers, while great value, aren’t enough of an angle to sell the product without help.

There are exceptions.

Offers such as:

‘Get ALL My Online Products EVER (Value $29,996) For Just $9.99’

Would certainly get attention, but few people are in the position to create this type of offer.

But if YOU are, use it.

Make your angle irresistible, sexy, unique, weird or whatever else you need to, to make the bugger stand out.

Secret 4: Make it 'Microwave' Instant!

Giving your customers what they want in double fast time is without doubt one of the best angles to sell from.

Instant gratification is a major selling point. If you have toothache at 2.20am in the morning you're going to pay whatever it costs to find a cure from 'any kitchen store cupboard in 5 minutes' right?

You can't just make claims though, you need proof with microwave instant angles or you'll lose all credibility.

Personally I don't dabble much in the instant gratification angle because there are too many variables. If I claim that 'anyone' can create a product within 24 hours I'm presuming a lot - who am I to say what people can and can't do?

Then again if I see clients consistently achieving results in a certain time frame then I'm happy to use it in my sales page angles.

Microwave instant ('Get XXX results in XXX days) are great when combined with other angles but to be honest I don't sweat about them if I can't work them in.

Secret 5: Challenging conventional wisdom

You have to be subtle with this one or you end up looking like a bit of a prick, using cliched devices like 'The gurus are lying to you'.

I use this angle quite a lot, but gently and with a knowledge of what people actually WANT to achieve.

An example is how I've structured my business (with an eye always on how it will look on a sales page!):

"How I got off the launch merry-go-round"

"Why I don't need affiliates in my business"

"How I've been a successful internet marketer for the past ten years without needing to be a 'hard sell' merchant"

"Here's an example in just one part of my business - affiliate marketing: My Flipping The Switch Strategy put me ahead of 95% of affiliate marketers, saw me featuring on leaderboards and winning prizes pretty much every time I promoted, and while I could comfortably live off my affiliate commissions alone I don't even consider affiliate marketing to be a major part of my business! That's how powerful approach is, and I honestly believe anyone can do this with a bit of guidance and effort!"

The way I do this is simple. I do things my own way and when that suits a sales page I add it in. If you find yourself getting results that traditional wisdom in your niche suggests you shouldn't, use them because they're gold dust from an 'angles' point of view.

But it doesn't have to be as 'contra' as that.

Just a gentle challenge to whatever the conventional wisdom in your niche is enough to get your angle noticed.

Even the smallest challenge can be shocking and controversial.

And (again) it sells.

Secret 6: Make It EASY To Use

Ease of use is a great angle. Think how often you use the words 'stupidly simple' or 'even your 70 year old grandmother could operate this system'

Those uses will still work to an extent, especially if supported by the other hooks I've mentioned, by far the best way is to create your own.

Key phrases are 'simple', 'easy', 'takes less than', 'even', 'shortcut' etc

I use this angle to some extent myself as you can see below:

I've also used 'Cheeky little technique' which implies it's fast and easy.

And I'm a great believer in time scales (small ones!) such as

'How to set up your first continuity product by doing just ONE day's work'

"We made $40,000 from this cheeky little technique!"

I don't make promises that are false or I can't back up, so where I DO mention time scales or amounts I back them up with facts, figures and proof within the case study.

(You can include the GREAT line: 'Proof Inside' in your salespage which is a hook in itself!)

But ease of use is a great angle.

Secret 7: Offer Little-Known Information

This is a great angle but you REALLY can't bullshit. You MUST have a unique method, service or information to get away with this one. You can't recycle info and claim this angle.

Personally, I leave this one mostly alone.

Secret 8: Proof And Showing and Telling

This is one of my favourites.

It's basically this:

If you know how to do something, or have done something will resonate with your readers, buyers or niche....tell and show it!

Really this is your classic internet marketing headline such as:

'How I made $2,390 in 19 days using Facebook'

But don't underestimate how well it works - this is a KILLER ANGLE.

Here are a few examples of how I've used it...

"How I Went From *Earning A Few Hundred A Month
To Five-Figures A Month!*"

IN JUST 30 DAYS!

"By Just Adapting My Mindset And Making Some Fundamental
And Simple CHANGES To My Business!"

Tony Shepherd

and...

$2,600 A Month Was My 'Freedom Figure' From My 9-5. *What's Yours?

You Don't NEED To Earn Six Figures From Your Online Business Straight Away...

...You Just Need The TIME And FREEDOM To Start
Realising Your True Potential:

"Replace Your Salary
With A Fast And Simple
Online Profit Model!"

"And I'll Show You Exactly How To Do It - Step By Step!"

There are plenty more example of this with my own products and thousands more if you look at WSO's and other launches.

If you can do something that other's can't - no matter how insignificant it might seem to you - then write it up, show proof and publish it in some form or another.

Secret 9: Shocking Predictions

A flair for research helps with this one.

I'm talking about angles such as:

'If you're still doing this in your IM business in 2019 you'll go BROKE!'

People are very interested in angles like these because they want to know more about it.

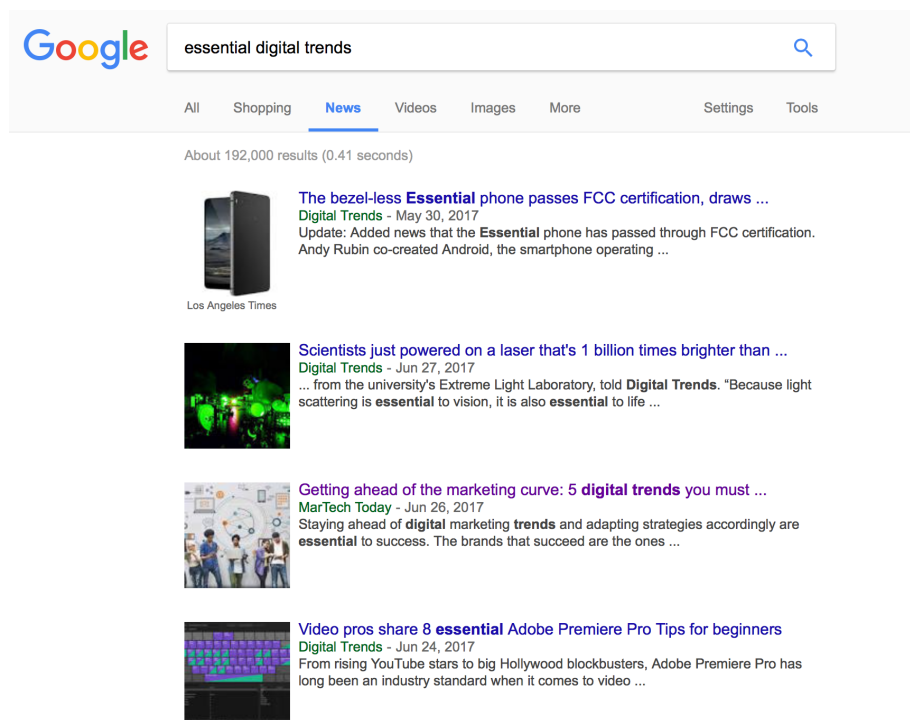

It's a very effective but simple angle to do.

Firstly you need to find a news story in your niche (search Google then use the 'news' tab)

So for example in the screenshot below I searched for 'essential digital trends' and then clicked on the news tab to highlight the latest news stories.

I instantly spotted the article

“Getting ahead of the marketing curve: 5 digital trends you must ...”

When I clicked on the link this article opened up:

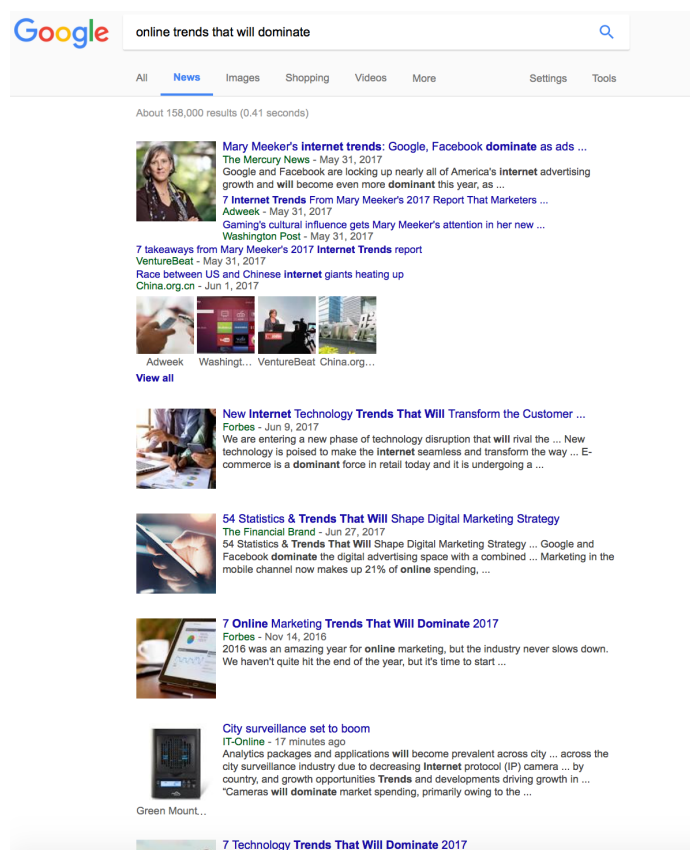

Which is perfect for me to create a report called (something like):

“Five Digital Trends That You MUST Be On Top Of If You Want Your Business To Survive Past 2017!”

All the information is in the article and anything extra that you need to link it to your niche, product or service can be found with some simple Google research.

It's not hard to do, yet most marketers and especially wannabe marketers don't do anything like this.

Predictions are great hooks. See what a simple search threw up:

Where to inspiration

hooks for free

get and great

Digg.com is still worth a look when it comes to getting some great angle ideas.

A quick search for ‘freelance’ threw these up for me:

‘The extreme anxiety of being a freelancer’

‘The fastest way to find top freelance talent’

‘The gig economy wants to work yourself to death’ and many more...

They are (or can be) great angles if you add some of the strategies from this publication to create your own

BUT the best way of finding irresistible angles for me will always be - shhhh
BIG secret coming next...

Da da da!!!

Magazine/Newspaper/Periodical headlines

They are simply SO good.

Check this out:

From front

just the page of

Entrepreneur magazine you have these amazing angles:

'The NEW rules of networking' (my capitals because that's how I'd change it)

'What your customers won't tell you!'

'100 Brilliant ideas'

...and we've not even opened the first page yet!

Also, this is only one niche. If you go to another niche (the example here is 'Smallholder' Magazine)

You have similar great angles and again this is only the cover

'How to handle pigs'

'Essential guide to lambing'

'Why go organic?'

'Speedy spring crops'

OK on their own, but just add a few touches based around the info in this publication and you could have

'How to handle pigs without danger to either of you!'

'Why go organic? (you might be surprised by the answer)'

'Speedy Spring Crops - How to have an entire season planned in 15 minutes'

You need to read the articles obviously but it's the angle that does the pulling and the secret is to push it to the edge of believability but not over, and a big part of that is what you're comfortable with.

You ever hear Gary Halpert's headlines?

'Wife of famous movie star swears under oath her new perfume does not contain an illegal sexual stimulant'

Seriously - who's NOT going to read that LOL?

or John Carlton's

'Crippled golfer stuns LA Open crowd by crawling from deathbed to beat 110 pro golfers with a 67 using a short back string and qualifies for last spot in the famous 2002 tournament'

(Yes that's really in John Carlton's Simple Writing System)

So while you might not want to go THAT far out (I don't think I would), you definitely SHOULD start including angles in everything you put out, because bland headlines get ignored.

But here's the meat and bones - angles ATTRACT readers (or viewers or users) to your pages, products and services, and the more people you attract, the more sales you'll make.

Most people in internet marketing are BLAND and BORING, whether they know it or not. And that gives YOU and advantage...

Your job is to put spin on everything you do - an angle to make it fun, weird, frightening, bizarre and above all INTERESTING.

That's what angles do (oh, and they SELL like crazy too)

Best,

Ian Jackson
